Jay provides detail-oriented yet practical counseling on a wide array of government contracting matters. Whether the issue is conventional or exceptional, he is often relied upon to attend to the particulars and distill for the client's realistic courses of action.

Jay's catalog of services includes but is not limited to representing clients for bid protests, small business issues (including size and status protests), requests for equitable adjustment, claims, and claim appeals. He assists commercial businesses and government contractors in joint ventures, subcontracts, teaming agreements, and cybersecurity matters. Jay's practice also extends to advising public and private entities on contract formation and administration, which includes but is not limited to the following:
